The U.S. House of Representatives voted 316-109 on Friday to add $2 billion to the "Cash for Clunkers" program, which offers rebates to consumers trading in older cars in favor of new, more fuel-efficient vehicles.

The federal program originally was funded with $1 billion, but appeared to be quickly running out of cash as auto dealers and manufacturers added their own rebates and incentives to draw buyers. Consumers with qualified, less fuel-efficient cars can get between $3,500 and $4,500 through the government program for their trade-ins.

Arizona's three Republican congressmen - Trent Franks, Jeff Flake and John Shadegg - voted against the measure, as did Democrats Harry Mitchell, Gabrielle Giffords and Ann Kirkpatrick. U.S. Reps Raul Grijalva and Ed Pastor, both Democrats, voted for the measure, which now moves to the U.S. Senate.
